FIFTEEN YEARS AGO MAN FIRST FLEW

The great Handley-Page of today. The photos show comparative size. The wing-spread of the little old Wright plane is forty feet; of the big Handley-Page, 230 feet.

(By J. Herbert Duckworth.) Dayton, O.—(N. E. A.)—Man first flew wings here in Dayton, fifteen years ago the old Wright biplane stayed up in the air just one minute, reaching a maximum speed of thirty-five miles an hour.

At this very moment, as I write this, there is an American-designed monoplane flying over the scene of the early labors and triumphs of Wilbur and Orville Wright at a speed of 145 miles an hour. There is also a big Handley-Page machine here that can carry forty passengers.

Nine years ago, Frank Coffey, in a Wright machine, gave me a flight of half a mile. I was the sixth civilian passenger ever to make a flight. At that time the late Wilbur Wright propped big things for the flying machine. He was right.

Thirty years ago Bishop Wright brought home a toy airplane, a butterfly-shaped contrivance with paper wings and a propeller spun with twisted rubber. That toy fired the imagination of the Wright boys.

In 1900, at Kitty Hawk, N. C., the Wrights worked their gliders. Finally they installed a light motor, and on Dec. 17, 1903, Orville made a flight of just under a minute.

This is how the airplane has grown: Wright biplane, wingspread, 40 feet; 35-horsepower motor; flew for 1 minute; altitude, 110 feet.

Loening monoplane, speed, 145 miles an hour; Maj. E. W. Schrodler, U. S. A., in a De Havilland plane, with American motor, reached height of 23,000 feet, or 5-1-2 miles. Curtiss flying boat, N. L. 1,140-horsepower, carried 50 passengers. Handley-Page biplane carried 42 passengers for one hour over London.

Caproni, in Italy, is building a machine, which according to tables giving ratio of horsepower to useful load, should be able to carry, at a minimum, 76 men, and, at a maximum, 134 men averaging 140 pounds each.

In the meantime, Postmaster-General Burleson is going ahead, developing the 200 air mail routes, and Police Commissioner Enright, of New York, has appointed Col. J. DeMont Thompson, to the Aero club, to organize an air police force for New York City.
